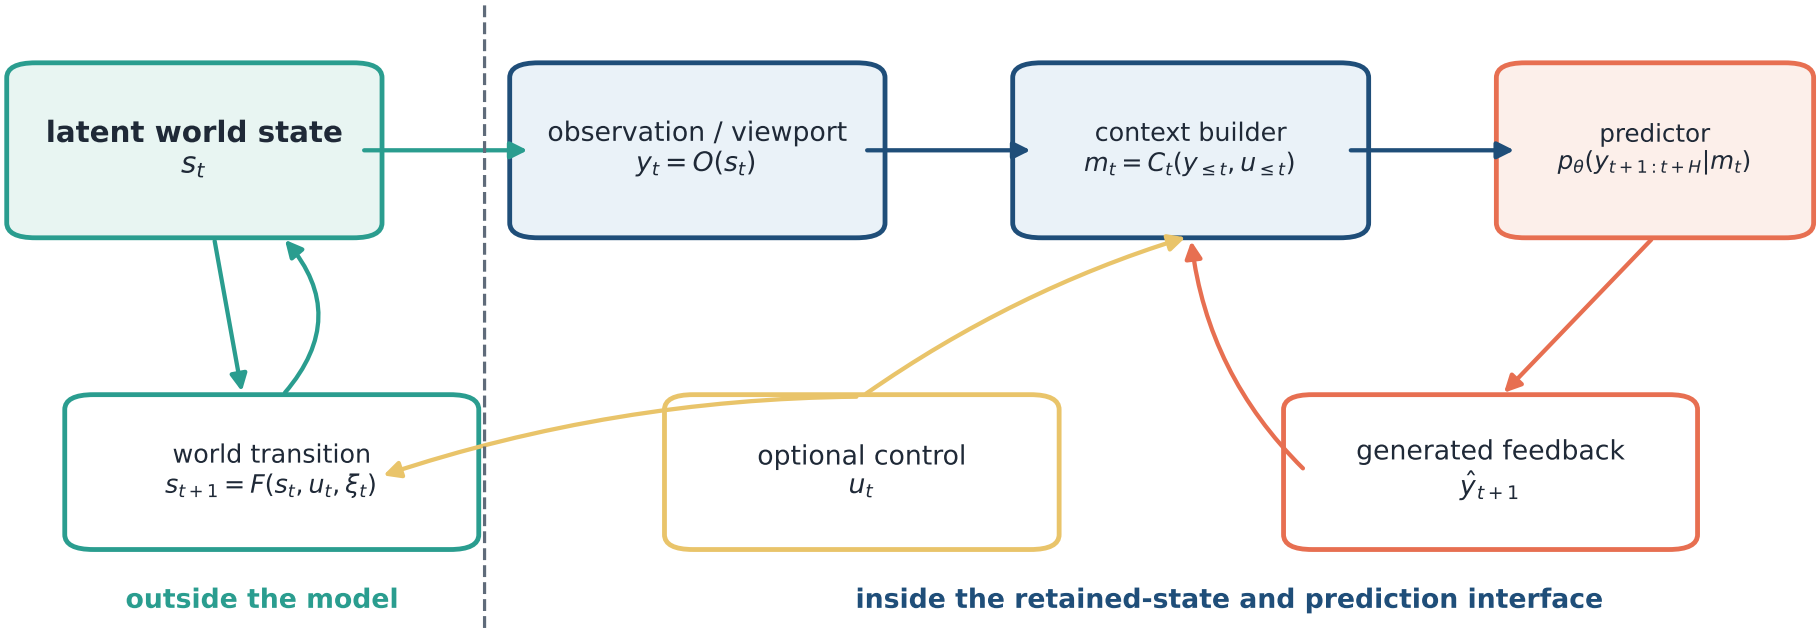
Long-horizon prediction is a partially observed feedback problem

The world continues to evolve outside the predictor and outside the current viewport



During self-fed rollout, generated observations alter later context; they do not replace the latent world transition.